In mid-February I was experiencing a health problem. I knew what I needed to do, and ignoring it wasn't the answer. I also did something I rarely do and that was to do a post on Facebook to warn my friends with similar problems to pay attention to the signs they might be experiencing. The following was that post and after the post is the rest of the story.

Facebook post February 19, 2014:

Rarely do I turn to Facebook to express issues of my personal life. This coming month's issue in the Network Marketing Magazine is all about technology but this subject hits home in a different way for me because tomorrow I go in for my third heart procedure with a catheterization. This is absolutely amazing to me that technology, in the health field, has advanced the way it has in just recent years.

The reason why I'm posting this is because there are so many people out there that don't recognize or acknowledge the signs that their body is trying to give them, that there is an issue going on inside of them. This is not limited to just men, it's both men and women who don't pay attention the way they should.

After going through this 3 times I reacted a lot faster than I did the first two times. My warning to everyone is to react when your body is telling you to react. God has given us the ability to understand what's going on way before danger lurks. I ask you to pay attention to these warning signs.

I will be continuing this thought in my article on technology in the Network Marketing Magazine in this coming month's issue (March 2014). If you want to check it out and you don't get it, sign up for free at <http://thenetworkmarketingmagazine.com> and check in on March 1. Until then, keep me in your prayers and God bless you all!

Well I'm happy to say all the prayers that I received (along with the awesome technology of the medical world) really worked! I feel better than ever, I have lost 10 pounds (and much more to go!). I completely felt God's peace through this entire time, but I must go back to my original warning,

If you feel the first signs of something wrong get checked out, don't wait! Allow technology to help you grow your business and allow it to also possibly extend your life!
